Pope Francis announces plans to visit Middle East n May

Pontiff says he will make trip to Israel, Jordan, Palestinian territories May 24-26; trip will be 4th-ever papal visit to Israel.

ATICAN CITY – The Vatican ancis would visit Israel this yea which would make him only the fourth pon visit the Holy Land in the modern era

The visit comes during a period of dramatic outreach for the Roman Catholic Church under Francis – not only to other faiths but also to groups often marginalized by the church in the past – and fairly early in Francis's papacy. Francis will have been pope for just over 14 months when he travels to Israel, Jordan and the West Bank on May 24-25. Only Paul VI, who became the first modern pope to visit Jerusalem six months into his papacy in 1964, made such a trip so early in his reign. But Paul's trip came before the Vatican even recognized Israel as a sovereign state. Pope John Paul II visited Israel in 2000 and Pope Benedict XVI made the trip in 2009. "It's less newsworthy now that the pope will travel to Israel and Palestine than it was a generation ago, but it is also significant to note it comes very early in his papacy, which I think shows it is a high priority," said the Rev. Alistair Sear, a retired church historian. "John Paul traveled more than any pope in history and he did a great deal to bring Jews and Catholics closer, but he didn't go to Israel until the 22nd year of his papacy."

The pope "is very welcome in Israel and he will be greeted as warmly as his predecessors were," Foreign Ministry spokesman Yigal Palmor said

But the trip has been rumored since early October. when Vatican spokesman Fr. Federico Lombardi said a visit to the Holy Land was a "possibility" for 2014 and Rabbi Abraham Skorka in Buenos Aires, a longtime friend of Francis, said the pope had a "life long dream" to visit Jerusalem and Bethlehem. Even as a priest, bishop, or cardinal, Mario Jose Bergoglio – who became Pope Francis last March never visited Israel.

Francis told the crowd gathered in St. Peter's quare in rainy weather that he announced the trip o Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and Amman "in the climate of joy that is typical of the Christmas

Until that moment, the Vatican steadfastly refused o confirm speculation about a papal trip to Israel, even after President Shimon Peres formally invited Minister Binyamin Netanyahu repeated the nvitation five weeks ago.

The trip will come four months after the 50th anniversary of Paul VI's half day visit to Jerusalem. which included a historic summit with Ecumenical Patriarch Atengora, the spiritual leader of the world's Orthodox Christians. The Vatican said Sunday that the current Orthodox patriarch, Bartholomew, will join Francis to celebrate Mass at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem. Francis is also expected to renew the Vatican's longstanding call for peace between Israel and Palestine, according to Vatican news sources, though the Vatican also tried to play down the geopolitical aspects of the trip, saving in a statement the trip was aimed at "spreading and promoting love, cooperation, and peace." In less than 10 months as pope, Francis has become one of the most recognizable figures on the planet, earning accolades including being named Time magazine's "Person of the Year."

He is credited with helping to reform the church's somewhat tarnished image, sparking a surge in church attendance worldwide and even a new wave of tourism to Rome and the Vatican city state. He has also started a period of outreach in the church, taking steps to improve relations with other faiths as well as to often marginalized groups within the church, including women, homosexuals and divorced Catholics. During his visit to Rome last year, Peres praised the gradual thawing of once icy relations between Israel and the Vatican, declaring that relations between the two states were "now at their best in the last 2,000 years."
